

When a coworker dies

Coping with grief in the workplace

People who work together are connected by being part of the same organization — and many co-workers become friends. When a co-worker dies, it's normal for people in the workplace to be affected — whether or not they were close to the person. Some may experience shock or grief. Others may feel anger, guilt or even fear regarding their own mortality. This may be especially true now as we face the uncertainty that the COVID-19 pandemic has brought to bear.

These emotional reactions are natural. They may be felt immediately or can appear hours, days, weeks or months later. It's equally normal to experience no reaction at all. Usually these feelings will ease over time. Sometimes the loss can feel so painful that it interferes with someone's ability to work or function at home.

If you've experienced the loss of a co-worker, the following information may help you better understand and cope with your grief.

Common reactions to grief

A co-worker's death may produce a wide range of symptoms that may feel unusual to you. Remember that these are normal reactions, and while they are different for each person, they may affect:

How you think

- Poor concentration
- Shorter attention span
- Slowed problem solving
- Memory problems
- Difficulty making decisions

How you feel physically

- Headaches
- Chest or stomach pain
- Muscle tremors
- Difficulty breathing
- Elevated blood pressure

How you feel emotionally

- Depression
- Grief
- Guilt
- Anxiety or fear
- Feeling lost or overwhelmed

How you behave

- Excessive silence
- Changes in sleep and eating habits
- Lower work performance
- Social withdrawal

How to help yourself

- Acknowledge the death and your reactions to it. Give yourself permission to feel bad without labeling yourself. Take time to grieve.
- Get plenty of rest.
- Eat well-balanced and regular meals, even if they don't seem appealing.
- Talk to someone who will listen and allow you to experience your feelings.
- Don't try to "numb the pain" with drugs or alcohol.
- Realize that recurring thoughts and feelings associated with the death are normal. They'll decrease over time and become less painful.
- Remember, it's OK to ask for help if you're having trouble coping. Contact your Here4TN Employee Assistance Program (EAP), or a support group.

How to help your team members

Remember that, just like you, your co-workers are affected by the death. People experience grief differently. There is no right or wrong way to grieve.

Sadly, we're unable to spend time together in person as we practice social distancing. But you can, and should, connect with your co-workers, whether via phone, e-mail, social media or video chat.

Be aware that grief often makes people lash out with anger or other emotions. Don't take these emotional outbursts personally. Suggest available help, such as Here4TN or a support group. It may take longer for some people than others, but with time and acceptance, the pain will lessen.

Here4TN offers you and your family confidential assistance to help you deal with a wide range of personal, health or work-related issues. This free service helps you manage stress, overcome anxiety or depression, and cope with grief or loss. Here4TN specialists are available any time, every day.

Talk with a specialist who cares, 24/7
855-Here4TN (855-437-3486)

Visit Here4TN.com

This program should not be used for emergency or urgent care needs. In an emergency, call 911 or go to the nearest emergency room. This program is not a substitute for a doctor's or professional's care. This program and its components may not be available in all states and coverage exclusions may apply.

© 2020 Optum, Inc. All rights reserved. WF1029804 202154-042020 OHC